Summary:

At first, you see a cocky grin.

Behind the grin

At first, you see a cocky grin
A shirt that shows off too much skin
A boy who only plays to win
    He looks good and he knows it

As soon as he got into town
He knocked some other fellows down
He rose to King and claimed his crown
    He's dangerous and shows it

He looks at girls with hooded eyes
And charms them all with pretty lies
He shoots, he wins, collects his prize
    Gets laid because he chose it

When he plays basketball, he's fast
His team mates often feel harassed
He bowls them over to get past
    Then steals the ball and throws it

On the surface, he's the King
He's been blessed with everything
There's a secret, though; one thing
    And he will not disclose it

The truth is, he's his father's son
They don't bow down to anyone
Except – in his case – for the one
    Who broke his heart and froze it

His father knows his son's flaws well
And makes his life a living hell
He senses weakness, like a smell
    Only to expose it

At first, you see a cocky grin

But not the bruises on his skin
And not the hurt he hides within
He's nothing, and he knows it

Author's Note:

Billy Hargrove is such an interesting character and I want more of him. I also think that he deserves a chance of redemption in some form. Just that, a chance.

Also, I own nothing relevant, I just like to rhyme.
